Risk factors for vision loss in patients with nonarteritic anterior ischemic optic neuropathy. To determine the prevalence of risk factors for vision loss (VL) in patients with nonarteritic anterior ischemic optic neuropathy (NAION). All patients with a diagnosis of NAION at the University of Wisconsin (WI) Vision Rehabilitation Center between June 2005 and March 2009 were reviewed. Medical records were reviewed to determine whether each patient had any of the following risk factors for VL: age ≥ 60 years, pre-existing glaucoma, hypertension, coronary artery disease, diabetes, smoking, and hypercholesterolemia. Descriptive statistics were used to analyze the data. A total of 182 patients with NAION were identified. The mean age was 64.5 years, and 61.2% were women. Diabetes was present in 30.5%, hypertension in 43.3%, hypercholesterolemia in 15.2%, coronary artery disease in 13.1%, glaucoma in 7.7%, and smoking in 8.4% of patients. Of the 182 patients, 51 (27.7%) had at least 1 risk factor for VL, and 41 (22.5%) had 2 or more risk factors for VL. Of the risk factors, only diabetes was a significant independent predictor of vision loss after adjusting for age and sex (P A potential role for endogenous opioids in the development of morphine withdrawal in rats.
