After working for the Trump campaign for a few months, his name started appearing in headlines over and over and over again as the specter of Russian collusion entered the frame. It's kind of a long story. You can read the timeline of events leading up to Manafort's guilty plea here. However, one part of Manafort's life that hasn't received a lot of attention is his professional poker career, which he began in the 1990s. It would seem as though the rest of the world knows more about Paul Manafort's career in poker than we do. When Manafort joined the Trump campaign, he brought along his poker background, and the pair formed a close relationship. It even sounds like Trump often showed up at the casinos to play some poker with Manafort, though it's unclear whether those visits were official business or just a fun thing the men did together. Manafort's game has gotten a lot of media attention. In addition to playing at casinos and competing in gambling tournaments, his career has taken him to some extremely high stakes events. In 2012, Manafort was paid $7.5 million to be part of a 2d92ce491b
